CSPRC names Pamela Hastings Perlmutter of Logos School “Nonprofit Professional of the Year”

(St. Louis) The Community Service Public Relations Council (CSPRC) is proud to announce this year’s Nonprofit Professional of the Year is Pamela Hastings Perlmutter, director of development for Logos School. Perlmutter received the recognition at the organization’s monthly luncheon on Aug. 11, 2015.

The award honors an individual for outstanding work in nonprofit, backed by his/her body of work and specific successful outcomes. Each year, the CSPRC Board of Directors looks for individuals who take a creative approach to achieving success for their organization in a competitive market. This year’s award recipient was the embodiment of creativity in the nonprofit arena.

“After reviewing all the materials, one thing was abundantly clear – the St. Louis region has a thriving nonprofit community,” says Kate Howell, president of Arch Grants and CSPRC board president. “Pamela exemplifies community leadership and dedication to the nonprofits she’s served. Her success with the public phase of Logos School’s capital campaign is a great example of her tireless efforts – she raised more than $1.4 million in pledges.”

Perlmutter has made a career of helping nonprofits of all shapes and sizes. She served as director of marketing and development for Gateway Homeless Services, director of development and public relations at Paraquad, among others.

“Having my body of work recognized by such a prestigious organization meant so much to me,” Perlmutter said about receiving the award. “It was so great to be nominated by my team at Paraquad even after I joined the staff at Logos.”

Perlmutter said to be successful in this work you have to not only love the mission you represent, but you have to have a team of respected and trusted individuals to work with.
